

Business

City Diary

Martin Waller

THE TIMES Wednesday September 2 2009

This is Profile, by Robbie Wraith, one of the entries in the Threadneedle Prize for figurative art, which is sponsored by the fund manager of that name and voted on by the public. The exhibition opens to the public today at the Mall Galleries, and the winner will receive £25,000 after the result is announced on September 14. The competition is for serious artists, that is, those who can actually paint, and has been gathering momentum since I wrote about it on its launch a couple of years ago.

